

Identity and Our Favorite Characters: Journaling Prompt

or encountered that you really admire:

Next, write down what you really like about that character. It can be anything – the way they look, act, or speak, or what they do.

Now, think about their personality. What qualities do they have that you like? Are there any you wish you had, or had more of?

Next, write about a situation in your life where you weren't happy with how you handled it or with what happened: (Try to keep it short and simple, but use the back of the sheet if you need more room.)

Here's where it gets interesting: At this point, write about the same situation, but this time write about how your favorite character would have handled it, using their characteristics and personality:

Identity and Our Favorite Characters: Journaling Prompt

If you were this character, what parts of their reaction would you want to use? Write out a brief description of what that might look like: _____

Now, this next part might seem a little weird, but learning to do this is a skill, and skills take practice. Think about practicing a sport – there are many skills needed to learn to do the sport well, right? This isn't any different, and it needs the same kind of practice. Make sure you're with someone you feel safe with, though!

When you have someone you feel safe with (a partner, friend, therapist, etc.), practice going through it, using YOUR voice and YOUR words but bringing in your character's characteristics. Use as much detail as possible. If you don't have someone you feel safe enough with, visualize this practice in as much detail as possible. Consider the following:

- What would you say? How loud or soft would your voice be? What tone of voice would you use?
- What does your body posture look like?
- What are you feeling? What do you think your character would be feeling?

Now, in as much realistic detail as possible, either practice or imagine the other person's (or persons') response:

- How would your character respond to their reaction? What can you use from that character's response?
- How would YOU respond to the other person reacting to you? Again think about what you'd say and do in as much detail as possible, and imagine yourself handling it confidently and effectively
- How would you want to end the interaction? Would there be consequences for you or the other person?

Write about your practice and/or visualization here: _____

Identity and Our Favorite Characters: Journaling Prompt

Now, process this experience: What does it feel like to hear (or imagine hearing) your voice in this situation? What did you feel and notice while you were practicing? How about afterward? If you visualized this experience, think about practicing with someone in real life – there is a real difference between visualizing and really doing it. However, both help!

Need support? Feel free to contact me for information:

 Laura Burlingame-Lee, Ph.D., Licensed Psychologist 149 W. Oak St., Suite 108 Ft. Collins, CO 80538 (970) 776-6043 thepowerofeachother@outlook.com

- With any situation involving another person: Use your good judgment don't get into dangerous situations or put yourself or someone else in danger
- If you need crisis support or immediate help: Call 911 or go to your local ER. In Larimer County (Northern Colorado), Summitstone Health Partners has a walkin crisis clinic at: 1217 Riverside Ave. It's 24/7/365. Text TALK to 38255 or call 1-844-493-TALK (8255).